

Take a 30 Day Weed Break

What to expect from a 30 day weed break and what to do about it

As THC leaves your system, you will go through a range of physical and psychological withdrawal symptoms which on average can last for up to 3 weeks (shorter and longer depending).

While effects vary by how often and how much you are using, this graph (Conner et al., 2022) is a good guide based on research to get an idea of what to expect.

Preparation: Preparing for Success

As you approach your break, you may feel a mix of excitement and anxiety. There's no way to know exactly what to expect, but preparation can help make it easier once you begin. One of the keys to preparation is knowing if you need to taper or get professional support.

Help yourself on your break by eliminating your supply and access to weed, communicating with your friends about your break, creating a strategy for dealing with your cravings, and reinventing your identity as someone who doesn't use weed for the next 30 days!

Week 1: Withdrawal is Real

During the first week, expect both physical and psychological symptoms such as insomnia, irritability, and cravings due to decreased THC in your system. By the end of the week, you may also notice improved focus and clearer thinking.

Prepare for the first week's challenges by acknowledging them as part of the process. Reduce withdrawal symptoms with hydration, exercise, hot showers, meditation, and approved supplements. If you're concerned about severe symptoms, consider a taper..

Week 2: Managing Mood

While physical symptoms may start to fade, be prepared for psychological challenges such as vivid dreams, irritability, anxiety, and depression to intensify. Although you'll begin to notice the positive effects of your break, you might also experience stronger cravings.

Your motivation may wane, but continue the activities you started in week 1 to stay on track, while also embracing mindfulness and other techniques to manage cravings. Developing new hobbies to fill the void and surrounding yourself with supportive friends or those who don't use is a recipe for success.

Week 3: Persistence is Key

You might feel lingering anger and depression even as other symptoms start to subside. You may start to feel things you missed about weed more now too. You'll notice clearer thinking, reduced brain fog, and gain insight on your relationship with weed.

Week three is a time for introspection and deepening your self-awareness. It's an opportunity to celebrate the resilience you've discovered within yourself. Continue exploring new activities to broaden your understanding of the world and maintain a positive outlook, particularly by being around uplifting people.

Week 4: Reflecting on the Journey

By week four, you'll probably feel physically adjusted, but the deeper reasons why you used cannabis might still affect you. If you were a heavy user, you might notice some lingering symptoms. Now, it's time to think about what you've learned from this experience and plan your next steps.

Reflect on your Clear30 journey. What insights have you gained about your relationship with cannabis? What strategies were effective and which weren't. Consider how you've challenged yourself and grown from this experience. What comes next? Will you continue to abstain, moderate your usage by reducing frequency and potency, or return to previous habits?

Beyond 30 Days: Living With Intention

Regardless of your goal, expect both good times and challenges. If you choose to stop using cannabis, you might feel like you're missing out on social activities (FOMO). If you opt for moderation, finding the right balance can be tricky. Remember, whatever your choice, including continuing as before, it's important to stay intentional about what's truly important to you in life.

If stopping is your path, continue using the strategies that helped during your break. Watch out for Fading Affect Bias, which is when we forget the reasons we wanted to change in the first place. If moderation is your choice, make a solid plan that includes not using every day and lowering THC potency. Always be honest with yourself, seek feedback from trusted friends or family, and be open to their insights. Onward!

Use the calendar to mark off each day you didn't smoke or met your goal. If you used when you didn't intend or realized what worked, write it down to understand your patterns.

1 Met Goal! Note:	2 Met Goal! Note:	3 Met Goal! Note:	4 Met Goal! Note:	5 Met Goal! Note:	6 Met Goal! Note:
7 Met Goal! Note:	8 Met Goal! Note:	9 Met Goal! Note:	10 Met Goal! Note:	11 Met Goal! Note:	12 Met Goal! Note:
13 Met Goal! Note:	14 Met Goal! Note:	15 Met Goal! Note:	16 Met Goal! Note:	17 Met Goal! Note:	18 Met Goal! Note:
19 Met Goal! Note:	20 Met Goal! Note:	21 Met Goal! Note:	22 Met Goal! Note:	23 Met Goal! Note:	24 Met Goal! Note:
25 Met Goal! Note:	26 Met Goal! Note:	27 Met Goal! Note:	28 Met Goal! Note:	29 Met Goal! Note:	30 Yeah! Note:

I want to take a break because:

If I have a craving I will:

Identifying as someone who doesn't use weed for the month is powerful. Own it!
Be clear with yourself and those around you simply don't use weed right now.

Need support on your break? Clear30 guides you with 30-days support. Check it out at www.clear30.org or text Clear30 to 60217.
For great group chats, check out r/petioles and r/leaves on Reddit. Other resources include www.weedless.org